Patent Fire & Water Proof
CEMENT.

Among the various discoveries which have of late been made in the United States, we know of none more deserving of public notice than the following by LEWIS DE NIROTH. Such a desideratum in the architecture of buildings has been long wanting. Many attempts have been made to compose or manufacture a chemical composition similar to that used by the ancient Egyptians; but we have heard of none which approximates nearer to that which is generally called the Egyptian cement and which has put at defiance the ravages of time for several thousand years, than that which the Patentee here describes.

A composition equal in durability to free stone for covering roofs, floors, and plaistering walls of houses —
Rendering Cellars that are marshy and damp water proof.
Chimney pieces.
Fire Hearths and cisterns.
Steps to front and back doors of houses.
Cement pavement entire for front and rear of houses, arches, and works under water, statues, images, &c. plaister out side of houses.

The materials of this cement does not much exceed the price of common plaistering.

A specimen of the composition may be viewed at Mr. Stelle's hotel, Capitol Hill and also at the Union tavern Georgetown.
